1. Japan's Benefits Landscape

Employee benefits are important in Japan as they help recruit, retain, and motivate employees, and reflect the employers' brand. They vary substantially, based on three key dynamics:

- Business sector
- Employee demographics (age, gender, occupation, and salary)
- Japanese or International Corporation

1.1 Business Sector

Benefits vary widely according to the business sector. For example, generous benefits are typically offered in the financial services/banking, high-tech, and professional services sector. Whereas in the retail and hospitality sectors, benefits tend to be more limited and less generous. Cornes, in conjunction with major employee benefits insurers, can provide sector-specific benchmarking services and advise on appropriate benefit design.

1.2 Employee Demographics

Japan has a mixed economy with the two largest areas being Services making up 70%, and Industry, 28%. The GDP per capita is $39,256 (2020), although there is a significant shift away from full-time towards part-time employment. Other than holiday, pension, health insurance, nursing care, unemployment benefits, and certain maternity and paternity benefits, all benefits are at the employer's discretion in Japan. The cost of benefits is determined by a number of factors such as the level of benefits provided, but also the demographics of the workforce covered, such as age, gender, occupation, and salary.

More comprehensive benefits packages are often provided to all employees in sectors such as banking, insurance, and finance, as well as industries such as IT, high technology and pharmaceuticals. In other industries such as retail, the care sector, agriculture, and manufacturing, certain benefits tend to be provided to senior employees only, with either none or very limited benefits being offered to other employees (other than mandatory benefits).

1.3 Japanese or International Corporation

The head office of the corporation can make a big difference in the benefit provision and salaries. For instance, job seekers will tend to prefer Japanese corporations from the point of view of stability, long-term viability in the Japanese market, and traditional culture. In order to compete, international companies need to offer higher salaries and benefits to attract quality staff. Costs of compulsory insurances are the same for both Japanese and international companies, but the international companies will have a higher cost per employee for salaries and benefits.

2. Mandatory Insurance in Japan (employee benefits related)

Japan has four different kinds of insurance systems in which companies are legally obliged to take part. All workers who meet certain criteria are covered by the insurance.

- 1. Workers' Accident Compensation Insurance
This covers any illness or injury at work or while commuting to or from work.
- 2. Unemployment Insurance
This provides for workers who become unemployed and help to maintain stable employment, such as by providing financial aid and subsidies.
- 3. Health Insurance and Nursing Care Insurance
These cover medical and nursing care expenses incurred by workers.
- 4. Employees' Pension Insurance
This provides benefits for old age, death, or disability.

A company must enter these insurance systems when first incorporating or hiring staff/workers by submitting labor and social insurance notification forms to the relevant authorities. The company usually pays insurance premiums by deducting the portion of the premium payable by employees/workers from their wages and paying these together with the portion of the premiums payable by the company to the relevant authorities.

*Insurance agents are not allowed to get involved in compulsory insurances in Japan.

3. Japan's Mandatory Insurances

4. Insured Benefits – Design and Typical Limits

When designing a benefits strategy, employers should consider the sector, employee demographics, wider business objectives, HR resource and capability, and the employee value proposition. Data analytics are being more widely used in benefits strategy design to ensure the benefits offered best meet the needs of the organization's individual workforce and that benefit spend is allocated efficiently.

Benefit	Comment/Cost	Lower Quartiles Approach	Medium Quartile Approach	Upper Quartile Approach
Medical Insurance	The Japanese compulsory national health plan provides for all employees, including ex-pats. Some companies take out a group 'top-up' medical expenses insurance either as a 'stand alone' policy or an endorsement to a corporate personal accident policy. These will seek to provide lump-sum inpatient and medical operation expenses.	Inpatient daily allowance JPY5,000 incl. operation expenses.	Inpatient daily allowance JPY10,000 incl. operation expenses.	Inpatient daily allowance JPY15,000 incl. operation expenses.
Life Insurance	Typically, group life insurance schemes include lump sum benefits in case of death, accidental death, and disability and usually amount to a multiple of each employee's salary.	All staff covered. Sum insured amount is JPY1,000,000 ~2,000,000.	All staff covered. Sum insured equal to 1 annual salary.	All staff covered. Sum insured equal to 2x to 3x annual salaries.
Long Term Disability Insurance	The most valued benefit by employees. This type of insurance is becoming increasingly popular in Japan and typically will cover all staff for between 60% and 70% of monthly salary up to a maximum of JPY1.3m up to age 60 or 65 years.	All staff up to 50% for 5 years.	All staff up to 60% to age 60.	All staff up to 65% or 70% up to age 65.
Personal Accident	Death and disability coverage due to professional or extra-professional accidents. Typically also includes a sum insured for treatment expenses.	Only senior staff up to 1x annual salary	Only senior staff up to 2x annual salary	All staff covered up to 2x or 2.5x annual salary with medical top-up.
Workers' Compensation Insurance	Mandatory cover by law is nevertheless a benefit for the employees. Almost all foreign companies operating in Japan take out top-up workers compensation and employers liability insurance. If a claim under the mandatory policy is accepted by the Labour Ministry then any 'top-up' workers compensation and employers liability insurance will pay out automatically.	All staff must be covered, and the level of coverage is identical to all and determined by the applicable legislation.

5. Wider Benefit Provisions

In addition to any mandatory and supplementary benefits, employers will often provide a wider range of benefits to help recruit and retain employees and support workplace wellbeing.

Housing Allowance

The company bears part of the rent and repayment of the home loan. The average subsidy is JPY10,000 to JPY20,000 yen a month.

Commuting Allowance

It is a system in which the company bears part or all of the cost of commuting. The amount tends to be decided in line with the related tax law allowing companies to make it an expense to deduct profit. The maximum deductible is JPY 150,000.

Family Allowance

The company will provide an allowance as a living aid if the employee has dependents. The benefit amount depends on the company and is not decided by law. Over 76% of companies provide family allowances. The average amounts are for spouses (between 10,000 yen to 15,000 yen per month) and for children (between 3,000 yen to 5,000 yen per month).

Medical/Health check

The company will normally pay the basic cost for an annual medical examination and annual flu vaccine. It is also the duty of the company to arrange for an annual stress check survey on all employees if the company employee number exceeds 50.

Condolence

Cash will be provided by the company, such as wedding gifts, birth gifts, injury and illness, condolence money, etc. More than 85% of companies have introduced condolence benefits.

Retirement Allowance

This is sometimes provided by companies when their staff retire and is paid as a lump sum based on the number of years that the employee has been with the company.

Self-Development Allowance

The company bears the participation fee for seminars and lectures, subsidizes the cost of purchasing books, and conducts overseas training at the head office on a case-by-case basis.

5.1 Company Perks

Below are examples of the more common employee perks employers in Japan offer.

Snacks

The employee cafeteria is costly, and the hurdles to introduce it are high. Recently, services other than the employee cafeteria have been introduced, and many can be started at low cost. The standalone company food service is a service where a dedicated refrigerator is installed in the office, so that side dishes and rice are always available. Employees can purchase from JPY100 per item, and there is a rich lineup of main dishes ranging from hamburger steaks and grilled fish to side dishes such as pickles and simmered dishes.

Outsourcing Benefit

There are two types of outsourcing benefit, Package Service and Cafeteria Plan. With Package Service, employees can use affiliated services within a flat-rate system. On the other hand, with the Cafeteria Plan, employees are provided with subsidies (points), and they can select and use services within the subsidy (points).

Group Benefit pools

More and more companies are signing up for suppliers of discounted goods and services where the scale of many employers can produce significant discounts on shopping, petrol, movie tickets, travel, and leisure activities.

Flextime system

Employees can decide the start and end times of work each day so long as they work for a set minimum number of hours per month. More and more companies are introducing this system.

6. Setting Up Group Policies

6.1 Life Assurance

- A plan can be established from 10 employees upwards
- Underwriting information in the form of Census Data should include the employees' names (in Japanese), sex, age, date of birth, and annual salary with fixed bonuses (if they are also to be insured).
- The premiums will be calculated according to age and sex, but an overall rate will be applied to the insured salary (& bonus) base.
- Individual Medical information is not required, and the company will be asked to sign off that the employees to be insured are healthy.
- All insurers will need information on any current long-term absent employee or any employee who is substantially ill. This information will impact premiums and/or the availability of cover. Pre-existing medical issues are excluded.
- Cover normally ceases at 60 years of age, but sometimes insurers will agree to extend cover to 75 if required, but premiums may be higher, and more onerous employer responsibilities may be incurred.
- Offshore policies are non-compliant and need to be placed with a licensed insurer in Japan.
- A set of Condolence Rules are required to be submitted and approved by the Life Insurer prior to cover commencing.
- Japan is a 'cash before cover' jurisdiction in respect of the inception of a Life policy. Renewals will sometimes allow for a 30-day credit period.

- A Japanese bank account is required, and premiums will need to be paid in JPY.
- Monthly declarations of 'joiners' and 'leavers' are required with premium adjustments at the end of the policy period.

6.2 Group Long Term Disability (GLTD)

- A plan can be established from 5 employees upwards.
- Easier to set up than Life Assurance as no Condolence Rules are required to be viewed and no monthly declarations for 'joiners' and 'leavers.'
- Cover will not apply to any employee not actively at work when the policy commences.
- Typical waiting period before insured benefits commence in Japan ranges between 12 and 72 weeks, and the waiting period tends to 'dovetail' with the period of Short-Term disability coverage under the company's compulsory Health Insurance.
- Benefits normally range between 60% to 70% of monthly salary with a cap of JPY1m per month.
- Benefits can also be provided for a limited-term period (i.e., 5 years) or up to the Government Retirement Age.
- A Japanese bank account is required, and premiums will need to be paid in JPY.

6.3 Group Personal Accident (GPA)

- A plan can be established from 1 (one) employee upwards.
- Easier to set up than Life Assurance as no Condolence Rules are required to be viewed and, with some insurers, there are no monthly declarations for 'joiners' and 'leavers' required.
- Benefits would typically be:
 - Death and Total Disability – 2 x annual salary
 - Hospitalization Benefit (inpatient) due to accident or illness

- Out-patient expenses due to accident
- Medical Treatment Expenses (in addition to inpatient or out-patient expenses) for both accident and illness
- Stress Check Service
- 24 Hour Emergency Consultation Hotline
- Emotional Help Consultation
- HR Help Desk
- A Japanese bank account is required, and premiums will need to be paid in JPY.
- Premiums will be based on factors including:
 - Claims history
 - Eligibility
 - Fund size
 - Employee age profile
 - Job title (Director Level or not)

6.4 Medical Insurance (Top-Up)

- Subscription to the National Health insurance is compulsory, although companies have a choice of joining the Government Fund or an approved Industry Fund.
- Insurance Agents and Brokers are not allowed to get involved in the setting up or maintenance of the compulsory medical insurance fund.
- Typically, premiums will be based on factors including:
 - Claims history
 - Eligibility
 - Fund size
 - Employee age profile
- Additional insurances for inpatient and surgery benefits are available either as a 'standalone' policy or endorsed onto a Group Personal Accident policy with more than 2 employees.
- Minimum number of employees required for a Group Plan is 20 and upwards

- Monthly declarations of 'joiners' and 'leavers' are required with monthly premium adjustments.
- A Japanese bank account is required, and premiums will need to be paid in JPY.

6.5 Pension

Superannuation/Pension

Regular company employees are classified as the TYPE 2 Insureds regarding the Japanese public pension insurance system. Employees working shorter time at big companies have also been included in the category. The TYPE 2 Insureds shall be covered by the Employees' Pension Insurance plan (KOSEI NENKIN, in Japanese). The premiums are calculated simply based on the salary amount.

The enrollment procedures are settled by the employers. Half of the premiums are borne by the employer and the other half by the employee. The pension benefit amount from the Employees' Pension Insurance for the respective insureds varies, according to the premium amount they have contributed. This variation is a major difference from the National Pension Insurance plan. In addition, the pension amount shall be larger than the basic pension amount paid from the National Pension insurance plan.

1. Old-Age Pension Benefit

Eligibility – Participants become eligible for the old-age pension benefit at age 65. The person has been contributing for at least 1 month and is qualified for benefits under the National Pension Scheme.

2. Disability Pension

Eligibility – If a participant becomes disabled due to sickness or injury, a disability benefit will be paid. Disability is categorized by three classes, depending on its seriousness. A participant cannot receive the benefit, if he/she did not pay contributions for one-third or more of one's previous participation period.

2022 Market and Benchmark Insight

Three classes of disability:

- Class 1: Total disability requiring constant attendance
- Class 2: Degree of disability restricting one's ability to live independently
- Class 3: Degree of disability restricting one's ability to work

3. Survivors' Pension

Eligibility – If a participant with an eligible dependent dies, a survivors' pension will be paid to the dependent. If a participant did not pay contributions for one-third or more of his or her previous participation period, the survivors' pension will not be paid.

Tax Treatment of Benefits

The tax treatment in Japan varies from benefit to benefit. Some benefits like life assurance can be provided tax-free, and premiums do not incur a tax liability on the employee.

Long Term Disability premiums do not incur a tax liability on the employee. Benefits are paid tax-free.

Some contracts are also subject to a Consumption Tax of 10%.

7. On-Boarding and Policy Administration

On-Boarding

In some countries, there is much more emphasis to the on-boarding process and the choices employees have to make. In Japan, there has historically been far less emphasis on this process because there are few choices, and employees are automatically enrolled in policies.

Benefits communication is, therefore, an important part of the process to ensure that employees understand and value the benefits available to them. Increasing numbers of businesses are now investing in employee communication as part of their wider benefits strategy. Cornes can support this effort by creating and delivering multi-channel communications, including employee presentations (in-person to an employee gathering or virtually).

Policy Administration

As advisers, we can provide administrative support in the form of:

- Assisting joiners with understanding the insured benefits.
- Monthly declarations to insurers of 'joiners' and 'leavers and associated invoicing.
- Dealing with any queries raised.
- Claims support and analysis.
